BIOGRAPHY

George McGraw is a leading American advocate for the human right to water and sanitation. He founded digdeep.org in Los Angeles in 2012—the only WaSH (water, sanitation, hygiene) organization working in the United States, where over 2.2 million people live without a tap or toilet at home. While billions of dollars have been invested to alleviate water poverty globally, those efforts are virtually nonexistent in the US, one of the only high-income countries where the Water Access Gap is widening because of forces such as climate change and widespread economic inequality. In response, DigDeep develops infrastructure, education, and research programs aimed at extending clean, running water and flush toilets to every American.

Under George's leadership, DigDeep has grown to serve communities through its Navajo Water Project (AZ, NM, UT), Appalachia Water Project (WV, KY), and Colonias Water Project (TX). George is also a respected voice in the water and public policy space, co-authoring the first national report on water access, Closing the Water Access Gap in the United States (2019) with the current EPA Assistant Administrator for Water, Radhika Fox, offering opinion and analysis for publications such as The New York Times, and providing subject area expertise to legislators and the Biden presidential transition team.

George is also a leading queer voice in social entrepreneurship and environmental justice. He is an Ashoka Fellow, a Civil Society Fellow at the Aspen Institute, and former Social Entrepreneur in Residence at Stanford University. George holds an M.A. in International Law and the Settlement of Disputes from the United Nations University for Peace, where he first developed the concept of a “minimum core” for the human right to water. George has shared his insights as a frequent university lecturer, guest on national broadcast news, and as a speaker for major corporations and universities.
