Comments for Public Posting: Why does a meritocracy scare you so much? The policies you support are the ones that actually created the problem you see to remedy via racism and stereotypes. You should be advocating for school choice so those you say you cherish get a fair shot at education. Long gone are the days of college prep available only to the rich. The LAUSD offers free college prep and exam coaching. All kids have the chance. You advocate nothing less than cheating through racism. Did you know CA banned racial preferences in higher education years ago, and there is still diversity on campuses. Perhaps not a magical statistically perfect representation of the population, but CA moved closer to equality and equal protection under the law. The equity you seek is racism and cheating, pure and simple. In your twisted view of reality, if all things in life do not numerically match the population, you cry racism, and your remedy is more racism.
