Comments for Public Posting: Single stair reform in LA would make it easier to build mid-rise apartments, adding more housing and easing rental pressure. As a tenant, this means better-designed, more affordable homes with improved natural light and ventilation. Updating outdated codes would speed up construction and create more livable spaces, giving renters like me more options in a tight housing market.

Comments for Public Posting: I support single staircase reform as this would make building apartment cheap and less complex.

Comments for Public Posting: I'm strongly in favor of this motion. I'm a dad who's seen a lot of my friends forced to move away entirely from the lack of family-sized apartments. We need to be making it much easier to build more and learn from other cities that have. Also, with the Palisades fire burning down a number of apartment buildings that will not be possible to rebuild economically under present conditions, we need to be aggressive in making building more flexible simply to restore what was lost.
