Comments for Public Posting: Let the rich rebuild at all cost, forget environmental protections. And let the poor lose the roof over their heads. We can't let this happen.

Comments for Public Posting: As an Angeleno who had to leave my home and whose household lost work in the fire, I am in strong support of this very necessary motion. Rents in LA were already unreasonably steep before the fires; we need to give Angelenos the chance to recover, and they can't do that when their already-high rent is being hiked or they're being evicted.

Comments for Public Posting: Many low-income workers have lost their jobs because of the recent wildfires. Gardeners, child care workers and domestic service providers who used to work in Altadena or the Palisades have suddenly been put out of work through no fault of their own. PLEASE put protections in place so these hardworking people do not also lose their homes. Now is the time to put compassion into action! Thank you.

Comments for Public Posting: I would like to register my support for the motion to give eviction protection to workers who lost income due to the fires. Natural disasters don't discriminate, but our recovery policies too often do. By failing to act, we're preventing thousands of lower income workers from having the opportunity to get back on their feet and recover.

Comments for Public Posting: Should the grocery market or clothing shop or the gas company suspend price increases for the people that lost their jobs?? Can the City Council make those business change their pricing policies? Why is it always the providers of housing that are the target of restrictions from the Los Angeles City Council. Instead of targeting housing providers to help create a welfare City and drive hard working housing providers out of business, the City Council should concentrate their effort on how to entice developers to build more housing and relieve the housing shortage.
