Comments for Public Posting: I am against any high density housing in the San Fernando Valley. It has been over-built and there is no longer any quality of life. There seems to no longer be any City services. No street sweeping, lapd does not answer the phones, traffic is horrible. It reminds me of an issue brought up in my 7th grade science class....when rats are over-crowded, they turn on each other. The extreme crime and violence we are experiencing seems to follow this theory. Drive out the tax payers and there will be nobody left to foot the bills for the low income housing issues that seem to take precedence with the City Council. There is the issue of a gas leak in Porter Ranch..an ongoing issue for years. If it is so dangerous, why do they continue to build in that area? People should be well aware of the issue, and if they buy there anyway they should not be eligible for compensation. As far as subsidizing housing and transportation....I want to live in Carmel and drive a Lamborghini, Where do I sign up?

Comments for Public Posting: I'm against the apartments being built at Reseda Ranch. I don't live in that area but the impact will be felt throughout the Valley. We already have too many people and too many cars in the Valley creating tension, frustration and anger. This leads to more crime and accidents! We were told that the ADU's that were being allowed were going to be low income housing and that the occupants were going to use mass transit, that has NOT been the case at all. There needs to be a moratorium on building in the Valley.
