Comments for Public Posting: Translated: It wouldn't be good for the center to close because it's opportunities for immigrant workers to do their jobs and develop their skills. Here in America, everything, everywhere, people need to work. You need to have alternatives for work, and options. In California, we used to have these centers-- "cachaderos", but immigration would come and take people. Almost every day! So the guys there got together and went to city hall to tell them to leave them in peace and let them find their work, and City Hall said ok. I'll help you. But we need to set down the rules. And the rules are to behave. And that's what a center is for! To get people to report to their cities, to do things responsibly, regardless of whether they're immigrants or not. People need to find work. All homes around here, are not free from maintenance. Alllll the homes you need to put in time. At 10 years old, they need maintenance, painting, plumbing, renovation, inside and outside. And what are you gonna do? You're gonna find someone who needs to fix that home. All that, the day laborers with all their experience with this work, can do this. But they need help. So people don't grab someone who doesn't meet the requirements for that work, who don't have the tools. They need a place to meditate for them too. It helps everyone.
