Comments for Public Posting: It's shocking that in the middle of a housing crisis people would rather see an ugly fast-food building preserved than to see people housed. I think it's also important to note that housing delayed is housing denied, and the over 1 year this application has apparently been held up by this malicious and frivolous request has meant people who would otherwise have lived here instead struggling with higher rent payments, moving to worse locations, etc. The process of landmarking should be reexamined if it is prone to such abuse, and the city of LA - ranked the #1 least affordable housing market in America -needs to quickly dismiss nuisance declarations like this if it wants to do right by its often struggling, rent-burdened citizens.

Comments for Public Posting: This whole process is shameful. It's a malicious effort to landmark a property in order to block the construction of new housing, including units reserved for low income households. The people who filed this HCM should be ashamed. This building isn't even used as a Chili Bowl anymore, and it's one of five such buildings in the city! It's not special. Preserve one of the others if you like, or have the people who want to landmark this one pay to move it somewhere it won't block housing for dozens of LA households -- or just tear it down. Look at it. We can't reward these kinds of cynical attacks on our city and its residents. Please reject this HCM application.

Comments for Public Posting: Public housing is in a shortage crisis right now. Please stop saving old unnecessary buildings for preservation and convert them into affordable housing.
