Re: Establishing a Youth Development Department in the City of Los Angeles

Dear Councilmembers:

On behalf of the undersigned expanded learning program providers, we stand in strong support of establishing a Youth Development Department and the accompanying recommendations from the City's Youth Development Task Force. Together, we serve tens of thousands of Los Angeles youth through afterschool, summer, and out-of-school-time programs located in the City's most vulnerable communities. Through this work, we have seen firsthand the need for additional coordination and investment to provide equitable opportunities for all youth in the City of Los Angeles.

Currently, Los Angeles is one of the few large cities in the United States without a dedicated youth department. Youth outcomes also trend negative: 200,000 live in poverty<sup>1</sup>, nearly 70,000 are disconnected from educational and workforce pipelines<sup>2</sup>, and tens of thousands<sup>3</sup> are impacted by the justice system. As policymakers continue to sort through the wreckage caused by COVID-19, these figures have not stayed immune: Between mid-March and late-April, 53 percent of statewide unemployment claims were made by young people ages 16 to 24.<sup>4</sup> At this point, only one thing is certain: the need for a department has been dramatically accelerated given the level of uncertainty youth and their families face in the pandemic.

The magnitude of complications facing the city demand that we do more. There should be an ongoing role for nonprofit advocates to deliver those solutions alongside city programs. By investing the necessary resources into a youth agency will begin the first steps in pursuing a systemic approach to youth development. A stand-alone department focused on prevention will allow for a restorative and comprehensive way of supporting youth and is an effective public safety strategy. The City's Youth Development Task Force is already working on a blueprint to create a unified department, and we encourage policymakers to complement its efforts by making a down payment. Once the initial investment is made, more resources could be devoted to expand the agency.

Los Angeles stands at a crossroads. The city is confronting unprecedented challenges, and has a unique opportunity to establish a Youth Development Department as the first step toward a more prosperous, safe and equitable future. We urge you to act now and take the steps necessary now to establish a Youth Development Department by creating the initial infrastructure and staffing for the department. The department will be instrumental in implementing the recommendations of the Executive Task Force on Youth Development that was established by the City Council to develop the framework for a department along with a citywide youth development strategy.

The work to ensure that Los Angeles is a place where all young people can thrive begins now. We call upon the city to establish a Youth Development Department and look forward to working in partnership on this important issue.

Respectfully,
