Comments for Public Posting: Didn't we already have this fight. Tobacco companies deal in a highly addictive, eventually fatal, drug called nicotine. Little seems to have changed. Our youth is still being targeted. Now it is with flavored nicotine. I understand the administered dose of nicotine is even higher than the amount administered in a cigarette. OK, tobacco companies have a right to exist. The tobacco companies have no right to flavor nicotine. Big tobacco is targeting again youth. It's illegal, but enforcement doesn't seem to be a priority. It just costs too much; and will take another half century to bring big tobacco to their knees again. However, we can pass laws against flavoring nicotine right now--and we should.
