Comments for Public Posting: I oppose this extension for the eviction moratorium. The rest of the Country and even our liberal Counties and cities (like Seattle) have already lifted. It is time to give property owners their rights back. The City Council is not imposing grocery stores or restaurants to give away their products and services with a self-certification 'hardship.' Why do mom & pop housing providers need to do the same? Please see attachment for more justification why the City's eviction moratorium is unjust.

February 27, 2022

Dear Los Angeles City Council Members:

As February winds down and March 1 arrives, City of Los Angeles will remain the one and only City in Southern California still in an eviction moratorium. And when that day finally comes, the thousands of small landlords that you "represent" will look to those of you who passed this moratorium without their input and will each think to themselves: "Not only has the City Council failed me, they have refused to even acknowledge me."

No doubt, the law's passage was done with good intentions and was necessary to give tenants a needed sense of security through tumultuous times. But that time has now passed and those tenants who have had trouble paying rent due to the pandemic will remain protected under new California state laws. Most notably, any future case based upon a failure to pay rent will first require a housing provider to participate in the rental assistance program and to exhaust all avenues before being allowed to proceed. And even if an unlawful detainer has been initiated, the law still provides for protections and safety nets for those who then seek rental funding. Along those same lines, I am happy to report that many evictions have been averted over these past 23 months and landlords are now reporting some success stories in receiving the assistance. I realize everyone's concern relating to a potential "tsunami" of evictions on the horizon, but that will not happen for those who have taken advantage of the state's protections. This large wave can also be scaled back by allowing some of the more egregious matters to proceed now.

With this in mind, most of the people that the moratorium now protects are those who wish to use the law as cover for impropriety and who are instead doing harm, not only to their beleaguered housing providers, but also to their neighboring renters. Here is what the emergency law has inflicted upon small landlords:

The Effect on Nuisance Matters:

The moratorium only allows for matters in which there is an "imminent threat to health and safety"

The entire purpose of terminating tenancies for "nuisance" or for "lease violations" is to avoid an imminent threat to the health and safety of others. It should come as no surprise then that the inability of housing providers to use these normal remedies has resulted in harrowing circumstances for rental communities that could have been easily avoided. With such a high threshold in place since April of 2020, landlords and tenants have had to endure:

For an entire year, I frustratingly had to advise Angelina C. and her disconcerted tenants that she was powerless to remove a household that was violating the peace and quiet enjoyment of the complex with screaming, arguments, loud music, excessive foot traffic, loitering and suspected drug use. Only once neighbors began to come across used hypodermic needles could we finally argue that the tenancy met the health and safety threshold. But by that time it was too late and shortly thereafter, neighbors were horrified as they watched the Coroner's office remove a dead body (not the tenant) that had gone unnoticed in the unit for over three days following the guest's drug overdose.

Without the moratorium in place, Michael L could have quickly terminated the occupancy of his subtenant (a defendant in three previous evictions for harassing behavior) in their shared-living situation once his housemate exhibited offensive and erratic behavior. Instead, because of the emergency law and because there was no expressed threat made, he had to wait until the subtenant actually attacked another roommate to finally begin the termination process. Before our case could finish, the subtenant was killed by Mr. Lee's own son in self-defense and his son now faces murder charges.

These deaths could have been preventable had the City Council listened to other voices and even considered a more balanced and reasonable approach to the eviction crisis.

Amalia M. manages a residential. She filed a case against her tenants in 2019 that had yet to be adjudicated before the moratorium stopped the process. For over two years she fielded complaints from other residents relating to this tenancy, including: noise, fighting, loud music, belligerence, and visits by Child Protective Services. Now, with the original matter still on hold, my office has been required to file a second and concurrent case against the tenants after one of the defendants threatened on separate occasions to "beat the shit out of" and kill Ms. Moran. She goes to work everyday in fear from these tenants, who should have been removed from the property over a year ago.

The Effect on Lease Violation Matters

Jacqueline W. owns a duplex and brought an action against her tenant almost two years ago after he failed to maintain the property, damaged the unit, made unauthorized modifications to the dwelling, allowed three unauthorized dogs, moved the mailbox, and refused properly-noticed inspections. This case has also been in limbo for the past 18 months with the moratorium in place. Since December 2019, she has not been able to accept rent from her tenant because the case is still active. But more harmful to her, she is now losing income from the second unit as it sits empty because no prospective resident wishes to inhabit an apartment with dogs running wild and common areas fouled with pet waste.

Joe W. is currently unable to initiate any action against his tenant who continues to smoke excessively at the property, is destroying the unit, and has allowed the unit to become overly cluttered. Moreover, his tenant lied on her application by saying that she did not smoke, provided a fraudulent reference, and provided a false past address. (She had been evicted from her previous residence for the same violations)

I have had to write multiple letters responding to threats by neighbors of disruptive tenants to sue landlords for their inability to remove the offending tenants. My office is also powerless to help homeowners who remain financially responsible for their renters' continued violations of community CC&R's. or city code violations for blight. The owners are required to pay the fines and penalties for these violations and fend off complaints made at HOA Board Hearings meetings while the tenant suffers no present repercussions and is free to continue in the unpermitted behavior.

The Effect on Matters Involving Non Payment of Rent

You will hear very little opposition from housing providers to any laws protecting those who truly need help and have sought assistance. The state has further ensured that these persons will still receive protections even after September 30 passes. The big issue here is the fact that many tenants are either failing, or outright refusing to participate in the rental assistance program.

Clay D's tenant stopped paying rent in March of 2020. Despite numerous outreaches from my office informing her of the rental assistance programs, she has failed to give any reason for her failure to pay and has refused to even respond to Mr. D's good faith efforts to maintain the tenancy. As of this month, he will have endured a loss of $51,000.00 in rent and $3,000.00 in utilities.

Bruce D. transferred his tenant into a newly renovated unit in 2019, and at a rate substantially lower than the market value. In return, the tenant promised to pay rent, but never once did. Entreaties to both the tenant and her attorney to seek rental assistance have gone nowhere and she has refused to participate in the assistance program.

Immanuel B. started a lawsuit based upon non-payment of rent prior to the moratorium. Like all pending cases at the time, his action was stopped dead-in-its-tracks in March of 2020. The owner and I worked diligently to secure rental assistance for the tenant, and Immanuel and would have happily accepted it, even though it would not have covered the rent prior to April 2020, which he was willing to waive. The resident then became non-communicative and when Mr. B visited the property to check on his tenant's welfare, he instead discovered an unknown person who refused to identify himself and then slammed the door shut. The balance now owing is $40,050.00 and will continue to accrue with no end in sight and no true ability to ever recover this sum.

Most of these small landlords rely on this income as part of their retirement plans, and in fact, many are already past their working years. It's also important to note that California's COVID-19 Tenant Relief Act requires tenants to show their own good faith by paying at least 25% of the rent between September 2020 and September 2021. While most landlords in California might receive this small benefit, those in your jurisdiction will not, and will have no recourse to ever receive it. Without any ability to enforce this obligation, the law has been rendered meaningless in City of Los Angeles.

The Effect on Tenancies at Sufferance

The moratorium maddeningly defines an occupant who is present by "sufferance" as a "tenant."

A "tenant at sufferance" is one who is upon the property without the consent of the owner and is effectively a trespasser, much like the example above. Many also describe this type of occupant as a squatter. The moratorium protects the interlopers, even though they have no privity or relationship with the owner. In most of these instances, the leaseholder has absconded or even died, with unknown and unauthorized persons remaining and only coming to light after months of rent have gone unpaid. As there is no agreement between the landlord and the occupant, the owner may not seek rental assistance and the trespasser has secured free housing for months to come. On no less than 15 occasions, I have had to inform small landlords that the moratorium prevents any current action against the illegitimate occupants and they are instead stuck until possibly 2022 with mortgage, taxes, utilities, insurance and maintenance charges adding up, with no income for the unit while an unauthorized individual remains on the property, without consequence or responsibility.

One management company came across this exact scenario earlier this year and had no idea that the original tenants had left until the rent went unpaid for months and others were found to be occupying the unit. They were at a loss to do anything, even with water pouring out of the apartment and into the unit below. Finally, after requiring a police escort to complete an inspection, the manager found the unit to be akin to a flophouse, damaged and unsanitary with graffiti-sprayed walls, no actual beds, four dogs and cats, at least seven occupants, mold growing in the bathrooms, some sort of apparatus containing water tubs and surgical tubes, and a secure room with a sophisticated psychedelic mushroom cultivation operation. We are currently waiting for the court to determine whether or not this has reached the "imminent threat to health and safety" This is another situation that could have been quickly remedied had some thought or opposing viewpoints gone into the drafting of the moratorium.

The Effect on Cases Filed Prior to April 2020

The moratorium continues to financially devastate landlords who brought eviction actions prior to April 2020 and that had no connection to COVID-19 issues. These matters that were either ready for trial, or even already adjudicated when the moratorium went into place. They have since remained idle, with new court dates now rescheduled in 2022 and no relief allowed prior to that time, or even later if the moratorium is still in place.

Some of these include:

Active Cases

Martha H. started her matter in February of 2020 when her tenant already owed her four months of rent totaling $6,800.00. (Non-COVID rent is not covered by rental assistance programs) Trial has now been rescheduled to January of 2022 - almost two entire years after the initiation of her lawsuit. She has now lost $40,800.00 in rental income while her tenants, who live on the same property with her, continue to smoke upon the property, block her from using her own driveway with their vehicles, and now have an unauthorized dog (Martha's family member is allergic to dogs).

Acacia C. rented out her own residence for the first time in December 2019. By the second month, her tenant had stopped paying rent. Ms. Chidi is still teetering on foreclosure after her tenant expressly refused to seek rental assistance and instead demanded to be paid to leave. She finally received some rental assistance, but only after I pestered the tenant's attorney. The tenant has now allowed the home to become infested with rats, has an unauthorized dog, and has refused to allow gardeners on the property, which is now blighted.

Stipulations that have been violated by tenants:

Here is a small example of other pending matters from my office which remain unenforceable

Unauthorized tenants at sufferance were paid to vacate by April 13, 2020 but are still present. The balance for the loss of rent is now $26,136.00.

$9,000 in rent was waived in exchange for a tenant to vacate by April 30, 2020. That balance has now reached $32,063.20

A landlord agreed to waive $58,100.00 for his tenant to vacate by July 31, 2020. The arrearage has now ballooned to an astronomical $99,540.00.00.

A tenant was placed on probation following his disruptive behavior has violated the stipulation for 18 months now with alcohol-induced profane, racist, and misogynist rants directed at other residents and the owner/manager

I have at least a dozen other cases like this, many in which the landlords paid the first half of negotiated relocation fees in reliance upon their tenant vacating as required by court-enforced stipulations, but where the occupant has shown absolutely no sign of searching for alternative housing, and unpaid balances now ranging from $25,000 - $60,000.00.

Cases where judgments had already entered and evictions scheduled:

A tenant had not paid rent in over four years and was (still is) using the home for illegal cannabis cultivation. The owner was required to incur over $30,000 in attorney's fees following a week-long jury trial and the lockout was finally scheduled for March 2020. It has now been postponed indefinitely, while the City of Los Angeles continues to lodge complaints about the property being used as a marijuana collective, and the owner left in the position of selling the property at a loss to avoid foreclosure.

A tenant was scheduled to be removed in March of 2020, but remains on the property today, still exhibiting irrational and disruptive behavior and throwing garbage around the property. The owner has been unable to rent out the adjoining units.

This is by no means a comprehensive list and reflects only a smattering of cases within my own small firm. Needless to say, the number of these experiences can be multiplied by the dozens of other firms who also represent property owners in City of Los Angeles. If you are not willing to lift the moratorium, you should be open to at least reconsidering some of its severe language.

Comments for Public Posting: This moratorium is going to hurt paying tenants for a long time. Money I can't recover I am going to attempt to recover through higher rents. What else can I do? This is what the City is telling me to do. I believe the reality is the City Council is trying the best they can (while also wanting to stay in office. It is human to think they are doing good things but couldn't do those good things unless they maintain power). The reality is tenants have been far more organized than landlords have. So the City Council have huge tenant groups telling them what they want and we have pretty much nothing. But I believe the City Council is making a huge mistake here. Talking to my tenants, they don't like free money going to people willing to BS their way through the system. They know this money has to come from somewhere. They will vote against people who are enabling this behavior. In talking to another paying tenant. She was trying to rationalize why she is doing the 'right' thing by paying rent. the City is authorizing non-payment and she is leaving money on the table. The City should not punish people like this instead we should be celebrating them. I for one plan to take care and reward her once this 'temporary' moratorium lifts in LA City.

Comments for Public Posting: Dear City Council. My family and I understand the tremendous burden of navigating the City out of this pandemic along with the strong consideration towards the vulnerable tenants. It has been 22 months in a vastly different environment than March 2020. My family had plans to build more housing with two ADUs (already approved by the Building & Safety Dept) on our lot to able to add to the City's housing stock in a high-transit area. However after seeing how the City has addressed this Emergency and how the City Council has trampled on the property rights of mom & pop housing providers we are strongly re-considering. We want to add to the housing-stock but seeing how the City has constantly made being a small mom & pop provider so difficult, in fact rather being disrespectful to our community, it makes no sense to continue upon this project. I hope the City Council understands how their policies are having the exact opposite effect on the tenant community. Sure in the short term there will be false sense of accomplishment but in actuality tenants will suffer more at the end. a 22+ month emergency without rent or any due-process is very damaging to many small landlords. They will have no choice but to raise rents the next chance they get just to make up for the atrocities the City Council have caused. Small landlords will have no choice but to have much more stringent screening processes because we do NOT want to left with a problem tenant that does not deserve these protections. The City Council is only emboldening professional tenants to exacerbate this housing problem even further. Please consider giving back due-process to small landlords as this broad sledge-hammer needs some re-evaluation.

Comments for Public Posting: I'm commenting about the LA ---- Free ----- rent moratorium. I own a duplex. One tenant told me on the phone that they are not qualified for Housing is Key but yet they are getting FREE rent through Housing Is Key. My tenant and their roommate are self employed so they can report anything they want on their tax returns. So you want to encourage people to get free rent by lying on their taxes and then give them free rent at MY expense? I'm angry at you. I reported this into Housing is Key but YOU must understand TENANTS RETALIATE. My tenant seemed to have known that I told Housing is Key this and has THREATENED to RETALIATE against me for reporting her in. Why should I do anything more to report her in when YOU are on the side of a tax cheat? These people are self employed so I don't think I can garnish their wages. One of the people in the unit is an UNauthorized tenant. I didn't even choose that person as. my tenant but I guess you are going to FORCE landlords to house anyone they do NOT choose as their tenant so they can get free rent. The other unit of my duplex has a couple of tenants who have paid me NOTHING in months and they will pay me nothing as long as the moratorium goes on and on. Housing is Key only pays for 18 months of free rent. At least one of the people in the other unit of the duplex is self employed so I can NOT garnish that person's wages either. In fact, TWO of that person's co-signers are now gone. Her husband divorced her and her co-signer died prior to the pandemic so how can I be paid? As it is, she won't change her life and YOU give her NO incentive to go out and get a job as everything is FREE for her on my dime! This same person will NOT comply with any part of the lease whatsoever and will alter my property without my permission. This could be a safety hazard. Landlords need a way to put their foot down on people like this but they can do structural changes to your building as well as plumbing or electrical without the landlord's permission. This person's roommate has also paid me nothing in months and won't pay me until and if you ever lift the rent moratorium. People are taking advantage of this and it was the problem tenants taking advantage of the rent moratorium who were problems before. The LA County Board of Supervisors needs to be fired! The same people over and over and over again are using the rent moratorium as an excuse to not pay rent.

Comments for Public Posting: A thorough re-evaluation of the City moratorium needs to happen. I have a government order to comply from your very own agencies, which the tenant initiated with the agency. The Government Agency Order requires me to evict said nuisance problem tenant yet the City's moratorium will not allow me to proceed with this Order! The City's Housing Department mentions the City Council needs to lift to proceed. How many ways can the City Council rig this game?
