Comments for Public Posting: So many of the enclosures haven't been upgraded or enlarged for decades. The last time I visited the zoo a few years ago, I remember a civet or civet-like animal pacing back and forth non-stop in its small, narrow enclosure. I remember these enclosures being virtually the same from when I visited the zoo as a little girl. And the lion enclosure is just too small, depressing, and made mostly of rock or cement, especially for the senior lion who has likely passed by now. And the alligator at the entrance of the zoo also has very limited space. We know better now, can, and should do so much better for these animals who are deprived of living in a natural habitat.
