Comments for Public Posting: It's mind-boggling that the government is ignoring THE major contributor to greenhouse gas emissions: animal agriculture. The UN tried to warn us in 2006 with the release of their massive work "Livestock's Long Shadow," which contained evidence that animal agriculture caused more greenhouse gas emissions than all forms of transportation combined. Instead of just focusing on introducing more electric cars and generating sustainable energy (all of which are important) we must focus on the worst offenders if we are to survive as a planet. It's time for LA to take positive climate action and endorse the Plant-Based Treaty. As a seasoned registered nurse of 43 years, humanitarian, animal advocate, and environmentalist I implore you to support the Plant-Based Treaty. It's our greatest, maybe our ONLY, hope for survival.

Comments for Public Posting: We want to thank you & commend this city consul for bringing up the plant-based treaty. As we Californians are facing extreme heat and water droughts, it is past time to address the most inconvenient truth- animal agriculture. Rajendra Pachauri, former Chairman of the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change said- "Unfortunately, the world has not really woken to the reality of what we are going to face, in terms of the crises, as far as water is concerned... Animal Agriculture." The United Nations declared- "The livestock business is among the most damaging sectors to the earth's increasingly scarce water resources." Please be bold and pass this and be at the forefront of taking true action to save this beautiful state and our fragile planet. Thank you.

Comments for Public Posting: Virtually absent from the public discourse and media coverage surrounding California's droughts and heatwaves is one of their largest contributors -- animal agriculture. The industrial farming of animals in California not only consumes an inordinate amount of the state's water supply, but also contributes to the greenhouse gas emissions that are causing these natural disasters. That is why California should be phasing out animal agriculture, promoting plant-based foods and endorsing the Plant-based Treaty.

Comments for Public Posting: Droughts are caused in main part by animal agriculture - both by water consumption and the greenhouse gas emissions polluting the air. California is at a tipping point and action must be taken - phasing out animal agriculture and endorsing the plant based treaty is the only way to go.
