Comments for Public Posting: Hi, I am writing in support of the Pacific Dining Car (PDC). The PDC is indeed a historic landmark that deserves preservation even on that basis only. More importantly, however, the presence of the PDC elevates its neighborhood. Since the PDC closed during the COVID 19 pandemic, its neighborhood has gone downhill. When the PDC was open, there were no homeless people wandering around, but now they are a common sight. I am convinced that the loss of PDC, as well as the loss of several other businesses/restaurants in the area, is a factor contributing to the homeless issue in this neighborhood. Please do everything you can to help preserve the PDC and keep it in operation. Thanks!

Comments for Public Posting: For PDC salvation When I was new to Los Angeles, and still awash in the negative common reputation of the city, it took events, people, and places of character to convince me otherwise. I was exploring with new maybe-friends and we stopped at such a place. A vintage train car in a parking lot. Here in front of me was evidence of the true identity of the city. Not shallow and flashy as I had believed, but strange and stubborn and respectful of its long strange traditions. Perhaps even magical. My new certainly-friends and I dined well that night, and many nights since in that oddly displaced train car. It was one of the pieces of history and of evidence that convinced me Los Angeles was not just worth my time -- it was home. Please preserve it so others might be equally convinced, walk inside, and sit down with me for a meal.

Comments for Public Posting: Please designate the Pacific Dinning Car Restaurant because of it's deep personal and cultural ties to the City of Los Angeles. Anything past 10 years here is considered old so by LA standards PDC is ancient and deserves to be enjoyed by future generations of residents and visitors alike.

Comments for Public Posting: The Pacific Dining Car has been my family's traditional spot for Christmas dinner for more than 20 years. It has so many wonderful memories for us for the fantastic meals, the fabulous service, and the gorgeous location. Please save it for us and all the generations to come!
