

Communication from Public

Name:

Date Submitted: 11/21/2022 09:52 AM

Council File No: 20-0291

Comments for Public Posting: Hi City Council! Octogenarian here. Just checking to see about Owner Occupy and your separation of us from the Big Guys. Still on the To Do list? I read New Mayor wants to win hearts and minds of those who voted for the Smart Builder Guy? Pls pass on she could make a dent by returning our homes to us. But if she insists on our helping her house the homeless, we might need some grant money. We'll need to go back to school and learn about drug counseling and providing mental health services as we are Mom&Pop landlords, our talents have been confined to offering affordable housing. But most of us actually aren't worried about our tenants joining the homeless, ours probably have some pretty top-notch camping equipment and maybe even one of those cool teardrop trailers. I am though continuing to be very concerned about seniors after reading on our private landlord page that many are being forced into foreclosure. The attorney for one of our members told him that; and also seniors were committing suicide. Which is not an exaggeration having watched the County BOS meeting last week. There was a call-in from a desperate senior, her tenants hadn't paid in three years, and she literally was crying and begging the soups to end. Naturally they extended it, even in the face of a Federal Judge saying it had to end, they managed to do an end run. I do imagine the City would not think of this, right? Several of us watched that meeting and we were alarmed and wanted to reach out to the Caller. But we are city and none have a county contact. Not that the BOS would have made note of her name. Well all youall have a great holiday week. I know you'll all be busy serving a T-giving meal at Homeless shelters. God Bless.

Communication from Public

Name: unhopeful LA resident

Date Submitted: 11/21/2022 08:51 PM

Council File No: 20-0291

Comments for Public Posting: the City Council has censored the mom & pop landlords long enough. it's a shame Councilman Raman did not want to participate in the segment to justify her broken policies
<https://www.nbclosangeles.com/news/small-landlords-say-la-eviction-moratorium-limbo-is-a-financial-disaster/3039254/>

LOS ANGELES

Small Landlords Say LA Eviction Moratorium Limbo is a Financial Disaster

By Christine Roher • Published 3 hours ago • Updated 30 mins ago

f

🐦

✉

Small landlords say city council voted to end the eviction moratorium put in place during the pandemic, but have not made it official and it's leading landlords to financial ruin. As seen on air Nov. 21, 2022.

Last month the Los Angeles City Council voted to end the eviction moratorium put in place during the pandemic. But the council seems to be stalling on making it official, because it still hasn't been signed into ordinance. This is frustrating small landlords, who tell the I-Team that the city has been ignoring them throughout the pandemic, pushing them to financial disaster. All while, they say, some tenants are using the moratorium as a ticket to free housing.

Sounds nice, right? Landlords say these are all trips taken by their tenants, who haven't been paying rent. They say it feels like they're subsidizing their tenants' vacations.

Monica, who didn't want to use her last name for fear of retaliation by her tenant, says her tenant, who has a job, often didn't pay rent throughout the pandemic. Yet, she took a vacation to Hawaii. Even now, still employed, Monica says her tenant has been paying very little, because the city of Los Angeles lets tenants off the hook for rent.

Get Southern California news, weather forecasts and entertainment stories to your inbox. Sign up for NBC LA newsletters.

"My life decisions are put on hold by the government," Monica said. "We are struggling and I don't know how much longer I can sustain."

Monica recovered some unpaid rent from the state, after it created a fund to help landlords recoup rent their tenants didn't pay. But that fund has long dried up. Monica says her tenant owes her $23,000, pushing Monica to the brink of financial ruin.

"What this is going to do is throw all of us housing providers onto the streets as well," she said.

News

Top news of the day

13 HOURS AGO

Driver Says Crash That Injured 25 Law Enforcement Recruits Was Not Intentional

49 MINS AGO

Surveillance Video Shows Thieves Targeting House for Their Halloween and Christmas Decorations

Ky Trang Ho has four Los Angeles rental properties, which are her investments for retirement. She says tenants owe her $70,000 in unpaid rent. Yet, while they’ve been stiffing Ho on rent, they’re taking vacations and sending her threatening emails.

“I felt totally taken advantage of. And I was disgusted. To see how these people are living their best lives, and meanwhile I’m buying stuff from the ‘day of’ expiration shelf at the store because it means something to me to save $2 on bagels,” she said.

After a tense debate, the city council voted in October to end the moratorium on January 31, 2023, and require tenants to start paying rent again. But weeks later, that decision still hasn’t been signed into ordinance. And landlords say some council members, like Nithya Raman, who heads the housing committee, are stalling and trying to make last minute amendments, which landlords say will only further hurt them.

“All I do is lie awake at night wondering how I’m going to get all my tenants out,” said Ho.

Some council members have long argued they’re concerned that ending the moratorium will put tenants on the street. The California Apartment Association, a landlord trade group, says that burden shouldn’t fall on landlords.

“This is an emergency measure put in due to the Covid pandemic. And now we’re looking at other societal issues that LA has failed to address,” said Fred Sutton with the California Apartment Association. “If some of the council members truly want to help individuals who’ve fallen behind on rent and are struggling financially due to other causes in society, we should absolutely work on expanding and making permanent direct rental assistance to help those individuals.”

The I-Team wanted to interview council member Nithya Raman, but her staff told us she’s unavailable. We asked for a statement, but didn’t get that either.

In the meantime, small landlords are begging the council to end the moratorium as they’ve agreed.

“If I were to give you a comparison, it feels like I’m bound to this chair, my hands chopped off, my legs chopped off, and I have no options,” said Monica.

Small landlords tell the I-Team that when their tenants move out, they’ll sell their property, which will only make the city’s housing problem even worse. But they say they can no longer trust the city to look out for small landlords.

This article tagged under:

LOS ANGELES • CALIFORNIA • SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA • EVICTION MORATORIUMS

Taboola Feed

Prime Is Now $139, But Few Know This Saving Trick

Amazon Prime has millions of subscribers, but only few know about this amazing savings trick!
ExpertsInMoney.co | Sponsored

Learn more

The Best Pizza Ovens to Make the Perfect Slice

Ooni Pizza Ovens | Sponsored

Learn More

Driver Says Crash That Injured 25 Law Enforcement Recruits Was Not Intentional

Nicholas Gutierrez was arrested after the wrong-way crash in Whittier and booked on suspicion of attempted murder, but later released from custody.
NBC Los Angeles

Amazon Left Scrambling As Prime Users Find Out About Secret Deals

Online Shopping Tools | Sponsored

Weather Forecast

LOS ANGELES, CA

59°

TONIGHT

50°