Comments for Public Posting: Taxpayers in Los Angeles pay some of the highest electricity and water rates in the country. We also seem to have the weakest power grid in the country. Every month there is some major problem due to infrastructure woes. Every problem with the grid and water supply was predicted 20 and 30 years ago, but the City has been happy to keep charging these high rates without fixing the problems. We've had decades of high rates in Los Angeles with very little infrastructure improvement. Where is all the money going? A weekend of rain should not wipeout power to schools for three days, as it did to my daughters' school last week. Fix the grid, or reduce the rates. This city should not be charging its citizens premium prices for substandard service.
