Comments for Public Posting: When I first moved to Los Angeles I was shocked by the poor maintenance of sidewalks. Our bowed sidewalks are like no other city I've seen, and can make it hazardous simply to walk on them, let alone to try to do things like pushing a stroller. Usually this bowing occurs around trees, but those trees are a crucial part of providing much needed shade in our overly-paved neighborhoods. We need to come up with systems that preserve our street trees but also allow us to make sidewalk repairs, and federal funding can take the burden of this off of the city's shoulders. Thank you.
